LOCAL MAN DROWNED IN FARM POND

Big Snake To Be On Display Here This Afternoon

Joe Bailey Dill said today that the snake which was reportedly captured in the Hub Bottom area yesterday morning, was moved from the Murray Drive-In Theatre because it was feared that the snake might injure someone. He also scored press services, both United Press International and the Associated Press for their skepticism and said that the snake was removed for that reason too.

The snake was taken from Murray yesterday morning to the Kentucky Reptile Gardens near Bowling Green, Kentucky for safe keeping. Dill said that he had no idea how to take care of such a monster and for that reason it was taken to someone who does. Mrs. Dooley, wife of the owner of the reptile gardens, said that the snake is a South American Anaconda. This was corroborated by Mr. Gray, of the Memphis, Tennessee zoo.

Mrs. Dooley, in sharp difference with Mr. Gray, maintained that the tropical snake could live in Calloway County during winter time. If the snake found a hole where water does not freeze, it could definitely live, he said. Mr. Gray has expressed the opinion that a large tropical snake could "not possibly live" in Calloway County in the winter time. The snake will be brought back to Murray this morning and placed in a sixteen foot long plywood cage, covered with heavy steel wire. Mr. Dill said that the snake will be on display at the theatre this afternoon free of charge. The snake created a furor yesterday morning when it was reported that the seven Murrays had captured the monster. Hundreds descended on the parking area of the theatre to see it. A large number of people who had become intrigued by reports of the big snake.

Almost immediately rumors and cross rumors were circulated that the entire thing was a hoax and that the snake had been imported to carry out the plan. This was vehemently denied by Mr. Dill and the six others who had participated in the snake hunt.

The group composed of Joe Bailey Dill, Brandon Dill, Bobby Dill, Jesse Shaw, Dwain Elkins, W. O. Spencer and Jimmy Dale Bary, reiterated that they had actually gone to the bottom land to seek the snake and found it. They reported that they had been seeking the snake for the past ten days, and that yesterday morning they left again and found the monster coiled by the side of the road.

The snake was captured, they said, by placing a forked stick behind his head. Brandon Dill then grabbed the snake behind the head, while others pinned the snake down. Jesse Shaw had the

Dairymen Recognized In Dairy Day Held Here On Yesterday

Thirty-seven dairymen representing 15 counties of the Purchase Region were presented awards of merit at the University of Kentucky—Murray College Dairy Day held at Murray College Farm yesterday. The presentation was made by Mangel Vinson for Commissioner of Agriculture Emerson Beauchamp.

In recognizing these farmers Vinson said, "These dairymen have made a significant contribution in promoting the manufacturing milk industry in Western Kentucky and the record indicates they have applied most of the essential practices for efficient milk production and for marketing a quality product. In the future we hope all of the manufactured milk producers in this area will be awarded the honor roll."

The honored group selected by industry field men and the State Department of Agriculture represented all companies located in Western Kentucky. The recognition program was developed in 1960 by field men representing the Milk Producers' Association, Pet Milk Company, Mayfield; Ryans Milk Company, Murray; Borden, Fredonia; Swift and Company, Fulton, and Charlie Irvin, Marketing Specialist, Kentucky Department of Agriculture; and E. B. Howton, Head of Agriculture Department, Murray State College, and President of the Artificial Breeding Association of Kentucky.

By working with producers and field men in this area, Mr. Irvin promotes mutual goals and the application of marketing practices to improve and expand marketing outlets for the manufactured milk industry in this area. The objective of the industry and state effort is to keep Western Kentucky, in the forefront in these progressive times.

Authorities indicate that statewide volume of milk products for manufacturing purposes has climbed to more than 63 per cent of the volume of milk marketed. It is being used to process a variety of products such as condensed and evaporated milk, cheese, ice cream, and related products.

The following received the awards at the Murray State Col-

Charter Shares In Drama Group Final Step In Theatre Project

A non-profit organization to sponsor outdoor drama and other entertainment in the Kentucky Lake area neared final completion with the announcement today that a limited number of charter stockholders are being sought to form the permanent organization known as West Kentucky Productions Association.

The idea for an outdoor drama association came into being earlier this year when Governor Bert Combs announced that The State would build an amphitheater in the West Kentucky area. The Department of Parks commissioned Lee Potter Smith and associates, architects of Paducah to design the amphitheater and the beautiful installation, overlooking Kentucky Lake in a wooded cove near Kenlake Hotel will be under construction soon.

Dr. Kermit Hunter, nationally known playwright has been contacted to explore the possibilities of a historical drama of the West Kentucky area, with highlights of the life of the late Alben Barkley, the former vice-president of America. Irvin Cobb, the Paducah native who made that city famous with his books and stories of Kentucky life; the founding of the steel industry in Western Kentucky; the invention of radio by Nathan Stubblefield of Murray and other interesting, but as yet unexploited historical facts of this area, included in the script.

At a meeting of the executive board held at Kenlake Hotel recently it was the decision of the group that a single individual be employed to gather the historical data of Western Kentucky and collaborate with a professional playwright to do the drama.

The sale of the charter stock shares is the next move before permanent officers can be elected by the corporation so that they may act officially to raise the necessary funds with which to hire personnel, sign contracts with professional people and transact other business. Mr. Hurt said, "We hope that our quota of charter stockholders will be secured before the end of July so that by September first we can open an office and start the national publicity to promote the show that we are planning to open next June." Mr. Hurt added, "Stock certificates will be issued to the shareholders and as soon as the necessary number is secured another meeting will be held to elect permanent officers."

Ferd Camp Of Near Kirksey Is Drowning Victim Yesterday

A 26 year old young man died yesterday about 3:00 p. m. when he apparently was overcome by cramps and drowned in a farm pond on the Max Oliver farm, about one and one-half miles southwest of Kirksey.

Ferd Camp was swimming in the farm pond with three other persons at the time of the accident. His friends reported that Camp had been mowing the yard and the four went to the pond to cool off. Camp seemed to suddenly be in trouble they reported and seemed to go over backwards in the water and sank out of sight.

They immediately went to his aid, but the murky water of the

Officials Are Elated Over The Performance Of Telstar

By BOWEN NORTHRUP
United Press International
NEW YORK (UPI) — Telstar project scientists, elated over their satellite's relay of French and British television casts into American homes, planned today to take the next giant step in transoceanic communication.

"Very shortly we are going to try point-to-point two-way telephone calls," project director Eugene F. O'Neill said in Andover, Maine.

These will beam from the Andover station to Telstar for relay to the Holmdel, N. J. station and points in Europe.

If the two-way calls enjoy the same success as Wednesday night's near perfect French and English television transmissions, the telephone conversations should sound as clear as local calls.

O'Neill conceded the success of Wednesday night's test, by which Americans saw an eight minute show from France during the Telstar's 15th orbit and a British program during the 16th pass over the Atlantic.

Showing Paris Scenes
The French show, taped in Paris and transmitted from Pleumeur-Bodou, gave Americans views of Parisian street scenes and treated them to a rendition of "La Chansonette" by Yves Montand, once linked romantically with Marilyn Monroe, plus a ballad by chanteuse Michele Arnaud. The presentation hit American screens at 7:37 p. m. (EDT). Reception was "perfect," according to a test coordinator in Holmdel.

The British Broadcasting Corp. BBC reacted with an angry charge

The Dodgers And The Giants Launch 2nd Half Of Fight

By TIM MORIARTY

UPI Sports Writer

The Los Angeles Dodgers and the San Francisco Giants launch the second half of their dog fight for the national League pennant tonight by visiting their favorite eastern "muds."

The Dodgers open a three game set against the New York Mets, whom they have whipped nine times in 10 games. The Giants will be at Philadelphia for a similar three-game series with the Phillies. At Durr's men ran up a 7-3 log against the Phils during the first half of the campaign. The Giants and Dodgers split a four-game series in San Francisco last weekend, leaving the Dodgers with a halfgame lead at the All-Star break. Both clubs will remain in the East through the weekend, with the Giants following the Dodgers into New York Sunday and Walt Alston's men moving on to Philadelphia.

Giants Record Impressive

San Francisco's record against the Mets is even more impressive than the Dodgers' 10-1 while Los Angeles has bopped the Phils 10 times in 12 meetings.

The New York Yankees and the Cleveland Indians, separated by only one game in the American League race, also will be on the road tonight when they swing back into action. The Yankees visit the Los Angeles Angels and the Indians open a five-game home-and-home series against the Orioles at Baltimore.

With their "M and M" boys, Mickey Mantle and Roger Maris, again knocking down fences, the Yankees have won 12 of their last 15 games, including a three-game sweep against the Minnesota Twins last weekend.

The Angeles, who trail New York by 2 1/2 games, are in much the same spot Minnesota held before the Yankee steamroller swept through the Twin cities. So if Bill Ryne's crew of cast-offs and rookies hope to remain pennant contenders, now is the time to prove it.

M & M Boys Little Help

In compiling a 5-3 record against the Angels thus far this season the Yankees have received little help from either Mantle or Maris. Mantle, hobbled by injuries during the first half of the campaign, collected only one hit in six official at-bats no homers. Maris has five in 30 one homer against Los Angeles pitching.

Both presumably are not going to sit still for that much longer. In Wednesday's only major league game, the Phillies downed Houston, 6-1, for their eighth victory in eight meetings with the Colts.

Art Mahaffey limited the 'Colts to five hits in picking up his 11th victory of the season. Roy Sievers batted in four runs with a homer and a double and rookie Ted Savage accounted for the GIVE SHADE for bedroom lamp—a dash of interest by using two-tone-tassel fringe to decorate it. The tassel is cut from the fringe, then it's either glued or stitched to shade.

JOAN O'SULLIVAN
SHADES of interest! That's what lamps should have and nothing's easier to achieve. Have a shade made in fabric that matches draperies, slipcovers or upholstery. Or buy a plain lampshade and treat it to some fancy trimmings that will give it a custom-made look.
Border Of Braid
Flat braid, available at trimming counters, can be used as a border around the shade top, bottom or both. Braid can also be applied to create a design, such as a Greek key motif.
Braid fringe is fetching trimming, especially suited to shades for casual Colonial settings or bedrooms.
Attach With Tape
Braid and fringe can be attached with double-faced masking tape (it's sticky on both sides) for trimming that can be changed to suit your whim. For a more permanent job, use glue or sew trim on.
For family and rumpus rooms, shades can be more spectacular. Use glue to cover a shade with a sea shell collection or a grouping of family snapshots. Stitch colorful fishing lures to a shade or glue on travel souvenirs, such as matchbook covers, ticket stubs or hotel stickers.
Don't let shades fade into the background. Apply trimming and imagination to light them up with interest.

STYLISH & BEAUTIFUL EAGLE PRINT lends Colonial charm to co-ordinated lampshade and chair slipcover.
GREEK KEY braid, used to band this shade,
has also been applied to the Venetian blind.

SHAKESPEARE TURNED DOWN

SWANSEA, Wales (UPI) — A local education committee turned down an invitation to schoolchildren to see a film version of Shakespeare's Macbeth.
One member objected that the play was "full of blood and thunder" and another said "Shakespeare wrote it after a thick night."

The squirrel's name comes from two Greek words — "skia" and "oura." The literal meaning is "he who holds his tail over his back to shade himself."

Mental Health In Kentucky Today

By Harold L. McPheeters M.D.
Commissioner
Kentucky Department of Mental Health

What are some of the kinds of problems that bring people to Kentucky's State mental hospitals? Generally the mental illnesses that bring people to hospitals are of two kinds:

1. Those which result from malfunction of the brain (called organic mental illnesses), and

2. Those which result from emotional and psychological stresses and strains of life (called functional mental illnesses).

The organic mental illnesses include those that result from old age-hardening of the arteries of the brain in which the inside of the blood vessels become so narrowed that insufficient blood reaches the brain cells, and senile brain disease in which brain cells are replaced with useless fibers. Organic mental illnesses also include the conditions that result from long excessive use of alcohol, from infections of the brain, from syphilis, meningitis and encephalitis, from other wounds to the brain such as severe blows, from major brain surgery or large clots in the brain.

Those with organic mental illnesses often show some forgetfulness and confusion about recent events. In addition, if they were irritable or suspicious before their illness, they probably show even more of these tendencies. Sometimes they show poor judgment in business, and they may have poor control of their emotions, crying or becoming angry more often than usual. If the brain damage is quite sudden and recent, as in delirium tremens, the shakes from drinking too much alcohol—the picture is one of confusion and fear, with frightening dreams. Delirium tremens, however, is usually of short duration.

The functional mental illnesses include the depressions in which the person is sad, crying, speaks of gloom and poverty and may feel that he would be better off dead. Functional mental illnesses also include the opposite condition, what we call manic reactions, in which the person shows abnormal energy and optimism as if he were facing his engine. These people are excessively talkative, witty and active even to the point of collapse.

Schizophrenia is another functional mental illness in which the person has withdrawn into his own thoughts and feelings to such an extent that he may not be able to separate them from reality or tell them apart from reality. Thus he may become overly suspicious, hear voices or see things that aren't actually there, misinterpret things said to him and things that happen about him.

Other functional illnesses include the anxiety reactions, in which the person becomes very worried about many things—his physical health, the welfare of his family, his job etc.—when there is no apparent cause for such worry.

Nearly all of these functional illnesses respond well to modern psychiatric treatment, so that people who suffer from them are soon ready to leave a hospital to go back home restored to relatively normal peace of mind.

Kentucky's four State mental hospitals are Central State in Lakeland (a suburb of Louisville), Eastern State in Lexington, Kentucky State in Danville and Western State in Hopkinsville.

Sports Parade

By OSCAR FRALEY
UPI Sports Writer

NEW YORK (UPI) — Fearless Fraley's facts and figures: Keep your eye on that Crimson Satan when they turn for home in the Belmont Stakes today because he finished so fast in the Kentucky Derby that the Churchill Downs stewards ordered a saliva test.

The red devil is a hard lock colt who had a miserable spring in which he suffered more ailments than you'd hear at a dowager's bridge party. Bumped badly at the Derby start, he never figured. But he made up six lengths on the flying leaders in the last quarter mile while they were in the process of breaking Whirlaway's 24-time record.

He jetted to the finish in such a manner, owner Peter Salmen reveals, that the stewards ordered a saliva test. The only time a Derby horse has ever been tested.

Boosts Old Timers

Clyde Bulldog Turner, coach of the New York Titans in the American Football League, doesn't hold with that deprecating jazz that the old-time grid stars couldn't have competed in the modern era. As examples, he insists, "there could never be a better fullback than Bronko Nagurski, a better halfback than George McAfee or a better center than Mel Hein." Or, it might be added, Bulldog Turner.

"Looking at the record," he says modestly, "is a better measure of a man than time who blows his own horn. But maybe there does come a time when there's nothing to do but look back, so you have to toot a little."

The Professional Putters Association still has a standing offer of $5,000 to send its champion against the Professional Golfers Association champion in a winner take all match. Maybe the regular touring pros are smart in turning them down.

Because in the Savannah Putting Classic, Bill Elyer won with a 63 under par score. Neil Conner had a total of 10 putts for nine holes—and only those pros who were 17 under par or better qualified for the final round. And these are all putts of 30 feet or more.

Stars' Often Fall

It's always amusing how few "All-Americans" become full-fledged pro grid stars, and how many valid stars come from small colleges. To prove the idiosyncrasy of All-American balloting, you know why?

One excellent reason is in an announcement by the San Francisco 49'ers of the National League. It says that they have coaches visiting spring workouts of 120 colleges, inspecting players they might want to draft next year. They look at talent, not press clippings.

Golf pro Fred Hawkins admits to being one of those pros who retain their sense of humor even when things are going bad. Some of this may be due to necessity, because while Hawkins is a consistent money winner who has finished as high as fourth for the particularly tough for a period this year when he missed the 36-hole cut three straight weeks.

"It looks like I've become a weekday golfer," he cracked. "What do you have to do to play on Saturday and Sunday, get a starting time?"

Generally speaking, Soviet cosmonauts are Air Force officers, members of the Communist Party of the Young Communist League, married and in excellent physical condition.

The War for the Union 1861-65 in Pictures

No. 187 No war keeps many private individuals from enjoying themselves. If theaters, race tracks, athletic stadiums continue offering diversions, they will be well attended.

In New York, a century ago, P. T. Barnum's "Great American Museum" in Broadway was attracting crowds to see "General Tom Thumb" and other freaks. There was high demand for tickets to "Mazeppa," a play starring Adah Menken—the name adopted by Dolores Adios Fuentes of New Orleans after she married a musician, John Isaacs Menken.

Menken was the first of her four husbands, Charles Dickens, Dante Gabriel Rossetti, Algernon Charles Swinburne and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow were among friends she cultivated meanwhile. Alexandre Dumas Sr. was an admirer she wanted to marry.

Adah had danced with an opera company at 11, penned a book of verse, and taught Latin and French in a girls' finishing school in New Orleans before she became a star on the dramatic stage. She was the first U.S.A. born actress to play with notable success in London and Paris. Her most popular performances were in "Mazeppa"—a melodrama based on Lord Byron's poem about a legendary Cossack chief.

Adah played the male lead without trying to look like one when the role required her to be semi-stripped of her clothing and hauled to a horse by the villain. The reputation that had preceded her return to her homeland, and the effect of Adah's appearance in the flesh, made "Mazeppa" irresistible to sightseeing theatergoers.

Longfellow could have had a good thing for being one of the Stage Door and Henrietta at "Mazeppa." Longfellow was a professor of classical languages, and Adah taught herself Greek well enough to make an original translation of "The Iliad."

Left: Poster representing Adah Menken, who was the Marilyn Monroe of her era, as Mazeppa. Adah, who, like Marilyn, adopted the Jewish faith for one marriage, died at 33.

Almost All Of Family Is Killed

WALLER, Tex. (UPI) — An automobile pulling a trailer full of household belongings collided with a truck load with steel today, killing seven members of a Los Angeles family of eight.

The collision almost wiped out the Cary Jackson family. The survivor was 10-year-old Deborah Jackson. She was in serious condition in a Hempstead, Tex., hospital. William C. Hageris, 57, of Houston, the truck driver, suffered a broken leg.

The Harris County sheriff's office identified the dead as: Cary Jackson, 53; his wife, Vera, 36; Mary, 18; John, 12; Larry, 8; Nina Lois, 6, and Sheila, 2.

The family formerly lived in Houston and was returning for a visit, sheriff's deputies said.

The collision occurred 2 1/2 miles northeast of Waller, 30 miles northeast of Houston.

PATIO BUFFET Olive Oil Adds Flavor

CHOPPED HAM and onion are sautéed in olive oil, then mixed with cooked spinach. Add vinegar and blanched chopped almonds to the vegetable dish for a flavorful triumph.

By JOAN O'SULLIVAN

GOOD cooks in many of the countries that border the Mediterranean share a secret. It's a formula in a bottle called "olive oil." They couldn't cook without it!

They use olive oil, with its wonderfully distinct flavor, in meat dishes, to spike vegetables, to make marvelous salad dressings.

Popular With Americans — The olive oil trick is one American homemakers are acquiring. Some have picked it up on travels abroad. Others tend toward the idea because olive oil contains no cholesterol.

Whatever the reason, the golden oil pressed from ripe olives adds extra goodness to a variety of foods.

In Two Dishes — It's used in two of the recipes suggested for today's patio buffet—and they're dishes that will make guests line up for second helpings.

The oil flavors a marvelous main dish, Hash A La Romano, and a veritable vegetable triumph, Savory Spinach with Ham. With them, serve a tossed green salad with a dressing of—what else but—olive oil, of course, and vinegar.

Dessert is a Mardi Gras melody of summer fruits.

CENTENNIAL SCRAPBOOK

The War for the Union 1861-65 in Pictures

No. 186 Jonathan Lettermann is a name not found in most history texts and encyclopedias where it belongs. Every soldier and soldier's family has reason to thank him. As an authority on military medicine, Dr. Paul Hawley, says, [1] Jonathan Lettermann photographed during war. Right: Army ambulance fitted up for both ambulatory and stretcher cases, to carry wounded soldiers from field first aid stations to the rear.

"Compared with what Lettermann did for the wounded soldier, the contributions of Florence Nightingale were small."

After the battle of Gaines's Mill, in 1862, over 2,500 Union wounded were abandoned by the retreating Union Army without bare, water, food. Dr. Lettermann ended such callous neglect. He convinced generals that medical service was as important, a part of battle plans as anything else, when it reduced loss of life, restored the wounded to duty quickly, improved morale. Lettermann provided for field first aid treatment, an ambulance system, and a chain of back-of-the-lines base hospitals.

Only three months after he was made medical chief of the Army of Potomac in July 1862, Lettermann's Hospital Corps moved from the battlefield of Antietam, within 12 hours, all of the 12,000 Union and Confederate wounded.

The medical field service he developed was adopted by armies of all humanitarian nations.

CHAPTER 34

AFTER a final skirmish with three British Dragons, Hugh Spencer expected to see a troop of them appear at any moment, but he reached the farmhouse without further incident. Benji Flaherty and the carriage close behind him. A farmer was facing leaves in the front yard and looked out across the fence reproachfully. "You can't come here, Captain Spencer. If the British find you, the value of this place will be lost to the United States." Hugh's voice was firm as he replied to one of Major Tallmadge's principal deputies. "I'm sorry, Major Edwards, but I have no choice, I completed my mission by raiding an enemy warehouse, and I'm carrying the counterfeit plates in my pocket." The surprised farmer laughed. "What's more," Hugh continued forcefully, "a civilian member of my unit has been hurt. Even if I could stay on the road and elude the enemy, he'll die unless he receives proper care."

"Why didn't you say so in the first place?" Edwards unlatched the gate, turned toward the house, and waved. Seven or eight men hurried across the yard, and as soon as the carriage drew to a halt, August Louis was carried into the house. Two of the men stared at Katie Dale for a moment as she accompanied her father's bearers, but the group was too busy to study her at length. Dragon patrols would spend the night scouring the area, and Major Edwards was preparing for the inevitable inspection of the house and grounds with the thoroughness of a commander leading his troops into battle. "Hitch that team to a plow in the south forty," he said. "Take the carriage to the old barn and shove it into a corner behind some farm equipment. Scrape off as much paint as you can, remove the left rear wheel, and smash one of the windows. You might smear some dirt on it, too."

"The subordinates obeyed without question, and the Simpsons would have joined them, but Edwards halted them. "Anyone would know that you're brothers, so you'll have to go into hiding. Abel, take them to the dormitory. You can go with them," he added to Benji. "I'm worried about the old man," Hugh said when they were alone. "They're taking him to the secret room in the attic, Captain. There's some risk, of course, but the British have searched the house from top to bottom stores of funds and haven't found it yet, so he should be reasonably safe there, and we'll give him every attention." "Thank you, Major." "I'm afraid you'll have to go to the dormitory too, whenever searching parties come here." Hugh didn't relish the prospect of being banished to an airless underground chamber that had been dug beneath the cellar, but he knew there was no choice. "The enemy might recognize my stallion, too," he said. Edwards was lost in thought for a moment, then he beckoned to a man who was pruning bushes at one side of the house. "Wait, give Captain Spencer's horse a benign bath. Change him into a roan, and paint a white diamond patch between his eyes."

"Be careful," Hugh added. "He doesn't trust strangers." The man grinned and led Toby toward the stables at the rear, speaking softly to the beast, and trying to establish a rapport with him. "That leaves only the girl," Edwards said. "She's the same one who stopped off here with you when you went into New York of course, I recognized her hair--and so will the British. She'll have to change her appearance drastically."

"The old man is her father. I doubt if she'll leave him." "She'll do what she's told, or all of us will hang," Edwards said curtly, and started toward the house. "Let me handle her, then. She's even more temperamental than my stallion, if that's possible. Tell me what you want done, and I'll persuade her to follow instructions."

They climbed the stairs to the attic, and Edwards pushed a wall panel. Beyond it was a small chamber without windows or a hearth. Several candles were burning, and the newcocker saw a man bending over August, who was stretched out on a narrow cot. Katie was kneeling beside her father, dipping rags in a basin of water, wringing them out, and applying them gently to his forehead. "Burnham was a pharmacist before the war," Major Edwards said.

"The man was cleaning August's wound with swabs, and didn't look up. 'This cut is deep, but I think I can get rid of the poisons so gangrene doesn't set in. Major, I reckon I'll have to keep watch over him all night.'"

Hugh saw that Katie was weeping, and that the cosmetics she had been wearing had streaked her face. She resisted when he tried to put her feet, but he forced her to accompany him to the outer attic. "Katie, continue the story tomorrow."

listen to me," he ordered. "I'll need me," she tried to push him aside. "You'll have to let others look after him tonight." "No." He caught hold of her shoulders and shook her. "All of us, your father included, may hang unless you follow orders. Major Edwards says that you're the most easily recognizable member of our party, and he's right. The British will be searching for a red-haired wench who looks like a trooper, so he plans to use you as a decoy."

Katie made an effort to pay attention to what he was saying. "The woman you met the first time we were here will give you some logwood dye that will turn your hair black. You can cut it, or change the style drastically. We'll leave that detail to you. You'll scrub your face until it shines, you'll burn the marks off your dress, and you'll wear that tinny-woolsey clothes that will hide your figure."

She shook her head. "I won't leave you." "Don't you understand that Dragon patrols are probably hunting for us right at this very moment? When they come here, the major wants you to be sitting in the parlor, knitting. If the enemy should find August, you'll have to trust Edwards to protect him. You're being called on to play still another part, and you've got to remember that the future of the United States is more important than any one of us."

"If Pa dies because he doesn't get enough care--" Hugh cut her short by talking the counterfeit engraving plates from his inner pocket and holding them before her dazed eyes. "If the British regain possession of these, your father's suffering will have been in vain."

"You're making me pay for my sins, aren't you?" she asked tremulously, looked past him, and stared silently at the unconscious August for a moment. "He'd want me to do my duty," she said, and raised her head. Major Edwards joined them. "Well?" he demanded impatiently.

"She agrees," Hugh replied. "Not completely," Katie declared angrily. "Even if the redcoats catch me and hang me, I refuse to cut my hair!" Hugh concealed his smile of relief. Her display of temper convinced him that she would overcome her fatigue and her deep concern for her father. She would give another magnificent performance.

When Hugh meets his old friend, Major Ben Tallmadge, he won't like his new orders. Continue the story tomorrow.

Our Soil Our Strength

By Robert Brown

A new publication designed to help city and suburban dwellers understand soil erosion problems on their lots, gardens, and small farms has just been released by the U.S. Soil Conservation Service. It is called "Soil Conservation at Home" and interprets the services experience in working with farmers for non-farm people.

The publication consist of 30 pages of suggestions on what the home owners can do to reduce the amount of water runoff from his lot and cut down on soil erosion.

The local SCS office will have a limited supply of these publications available to interested persons.

Herman Darnell is doing a face lifting job on the small farm he owns at Coldwater. Gullies have been pushed in and leveled for making grass waterways, other croded areas in the field have been leveled and the entire field will be needed to permanent grasses and legumes.

James Black, near Coldwater has completed a pond and also leveling of some gullied areas for seeding to permanent pasture in late summer.

O. V. Bogard, Lynn Grove has started work on land clearing, waterways, and pond construction. Gaylon White tells me he has found a way to make sericea more palatable. A heavy application of complete fertilizer has done the job.

It has been our observation that most pasture plants become unpalatable because of lack of fertility or failure to keep pasture clipped.
